CORPORATION OF THE CITY OF CAMBRIDGE

Description of Property

70 Oak Street is a one-and-a-half-storey stone residence located on the north side of Oak Street in the historic Galt area of Cambridge. The property forms part of a former 19th-century subdivision and is situated in a residential neighborhood characterized by mature trees and early stone and brick homes. It is currently listed on the City's Heritage Register.

Statement of Cultural Heritage Value or Interest

The property at 70 Oak Street has design/physical value as a representative example of vernacular stone residential architecture in mid-19th-century Galt. Constructed with uncoursed multicolored fieldstone and retaining its original front door and wooden porch, the dwelling showcases craftsmanship typical of early tradespeople and local building traditions.

The property has historical/associative value for its connection to Henry Aldoris and Charles Wilber, carpenters who owned the lot in the 1850s, as well as Nellie Lundy Graham, who resided in the house in the early 20th century. Nellie Graham was the daughter of Dr. J.B. Lundy, an early physician in the region, and the wife of James Young Graham, a prominent pharmacist and civic figure in Galt. Their long-term residence at this address contributes to an understanding of Galt's professional and religious history.

The property has contextual value as a contributing element to the historic streetscape of Oak Street. It supports the area's 19th-century residential character and is historically and visually linked to nearby properties associated with early Galt development.

Key attributes that reflect the cultural heritage value of the property include:

- One-and-a-half-storey form and front-gabled massing
- Random-coursed fieldstone exterior walls with varied hues

- Window openings with stone lintels and sills
- Yellow-brick chimney at the gable end
